There it was- the sound that I had been dreading for the last eight hours, ringing loudly into my ear and disrupting my silent thoughts. It was still dark outside and even counting sheep hadn't helped me nod off. As I lay comfortably in my warm lair, I considered staying there for another eight hours.

Birds chirped wildly above me in the clear blue sky the heady scent of fertilizer filled my nostrils. It was chilly but the ground remained soft, perfect for raking. I picked up the tiny packet of seeds and read the instructions carefully, before filling the watering can.

Rain beat down onto the window at my left, but the warmth from the sun kissed my right cheek. I gazed, in wonder, out of the windscreen at the vibrant colours above. They formed an arch, which stretched as far as my eyes could see. It never ceases to amaze me how beautiful and clever the world can be.
